But now, they were gone; of bast or good Not one was left for the old hely's food, Of those potatoes; Ind she sighed and said; "What shall I do? There shall I send, and to whom shall I go, For more potatoes?

And she thought of the deacon over the way. The deacon so ready to worship and pray, Whose cellar was full of polatoes; She said: "I will send for the deacon to come He'll not much mind to give me some Of such a store of potatoes."

And the deacon came over as fast as I Thinking to do the old lady some good, But never for once of potatoes. ie asked her at once what was her chief not quite so indispensable. want, And she, simple soul, expecting a grant, immediately answered "Potatoes." men to flirting.

But the descon's religion didn't lie that He was more accustomed to preach and pray
Than to give his hoarded potatoes.
So, not hearing, of course, what the old lady He rese to pray with uncovered head, But she only thought of potatoes.

He prayed for patience, goodness and grace; But when he prayed, "Lord give her peace," She audibly sighed—"Give potatoes." And at the end of each prayer which he He heard, or thought he heard, in its stead, The same request for potatoes. The deacon was troubled-knew not what Twas very embarrassing to have her act so,

And about these carnal potatoes. So closing his prayers, he started for home; The door closed behind, he heard a deep "Orgive to the hungry, pointoes!" And the grean followed him all the way In the midst of the night it haunted his "O, give to the hungry, potatoes!" He could bear it no longer; arose and

Again he went to the widow's lone but; Her sleepless eyes she had not yet shut, But there she sat in her old arm chair, With the same wan features, same wan at the entered, and poured upon the floor, A bushel or more from his goodly store Of choicest potatoes.

All gerbands are groan-ing under a plentiful harvest, and one cannot starve unless he wants to commit suicide. Therefore we should give thanks to Him who has given ms plenty. The past year is a blank to those who have done nothing. Every man and woman should ask to those who have done nothing. Every man and woman should ask the heavier will be the demands of the victors.
